Ryan Remington waits backstage at the recital in Rapid City, with ballet students, who were under the direction of Ryan's wife, Christy.

Director Christy Remington wrote and directed a ballet called "Dakota Skies" and the Jazz Recital called "Hats off to Dance" in Rapid City, with 350 students participating.

There were 350 students participating in the recitals. Larry and Glenna helped backstage with rehearsals, and worked at the sales table and took tickets. Hannah Remington, daughter of Larry and Glenna, was a recital and childcare assistant, and Ryan was music manager. As part of the "Hats off to Dance" recital, there was a Drumline from Central High School, Rapid City, directed by Toby Rath, former band instructor of Groton High School. The drumline was used for the tap dancers, as well as, for the finale of the show. The ballet was dedicated to Christy's grandfathers, the late Llewellyn Folsland and Glen Nelson.
